I wanted to learn more about how rockets work, so I did some research and this is what I learned. The exhaust from a rocket is the flame, gases, and other things coming out of the rocket. The exhaust from the rocket pushes the rocket down to the ground. That's the action—force. Is it a little weird it goes to the ground? As a response to the action force pushing it to the ground, it goes the opposite direction going upwards instead of downwards. That's the reaction force. To launch the rocket, the rocket needs enough propellants so that the thrust pushing the rocket up is greater than the force of gravity. I think we both learned something today.
